New Zealand Oil & Gas acknowledges Tony Radford's contribution

New Zealand Oil & Gas Chairman Peter Griffiths has acknowledged the contribution of Tony Radford to the New Zealand petroleum industry.

Mr Radford will be leaving the New Zealand Oil & Gas Board following the outcome of the company's Annual Meeting today.

Mr Radford was a founder of the company, its chief executive for many years and chairman until last year, when he stepped down.

"Tony started New Zealand Oil & Gas with a vision for a New Zealand company exploring for and producing the country's own resources. During his long service the company was involved in some significant discoveries, including Kupe and Tui, which continue to produce returns.

"He has made a lasting contribution to New Zealand, to our industry and to our company" Mr Griffiths said.
