Executive leadership changes

Abacus Property Group (Abacus) [ASX: ABP] today announced that Rob Boulderstone will retire from his position as Chief Financial Officer (CFO) after 18 years with the Group.

Abacus' Managing Director, Steven Sewell commented "Rob has made a significant contribution to Abacus as a trusted leader and member of the Executive Committee. Since my appointment to Managing Director in 2018, Rob has been a key contributor to the strategic transformation of Abacus to a strong asset backed, annuity style business model and I thank him for his dedication and support."

Rob will remain with the company until 31 August 2022 to ensure a smooth transition and hand over.

In line with Abacus' succession planning and effective 1 July, Evan Goodridge will be appointed to the position of CFO. Evan joined Abacus in 2011 and in his current position as General Manager – Finance, has led the finance function across treasury, financial reporting, accounting and tax. Evan is a CPA and holds a Masters of Applied Finance from Macquarie University Sydney and a Masters of Commerce from The University of Western Sydney.

Abacus' Managing Director, Steven Sewell commented "Having worked closely with Rob for the past 10 years, Evan brings the relevant experience to the role and together with Rob will ensure a smooth transition. I look forward to continuing to work with Evan and congratulate him on his appointment as CFO and a member of our Executive Committee."
