FERROSILICON MARKET REVIEW

Prices range bound, given Chinese cost, with potential catalysts from Russian output

Relatively fixed input costs, earnings correlate well with absolute prices

Prices follow typical commodity price cycles

China remains as marginal suppliers to the market. Continued downward pressure on prices (-8.5% YoY) due to lower demand and competition from Russian products. FeSi price decreased from US$1,185 to US$1,120 per tonne CIF Japan.

Outlook: Continued near term pressure with macroeconomic uncertainties, with major Chinese producers reducing production.

MANGANESE ORE AND ALLOY MARKET REVIEW

Mn alloy prices restabilizing after volatility from upstream ore prices

Strong monthly contemporaneous correlation between Mn Ore and Mn alloys

“Conversion” margin between ore and alloy prices mean-revert, creating resilience

Mn ore High Grade closed at US$4.97/dmtu CIF China, an increase of 21.8% from US$4.08/dmtu CIF China during the previous quarter. SiMn price increased from US$885 to US$965 per tonne CIF Japan on the back of stronger manganese ore prices.

Outlook: Prices normalizing, with the expectation of a key global ore supplier resuming operations. Reduced utilization rates globally add to price stability.
